Investor Profile

Typical investors in this portfolio are likely those looking for capital growth through exposure to long-term structural themes. Investors in this portfolio should have the tolerance and ability to accept volatility akin to equity investing.

Portfolio Aim

The Global Megatrends portfolio seeks to provide equity exposure to long-term structural themes such as: climate change and resource scarcity, demographic shifts, emerging global wealth and technological innovation.

Portfolio Characteristics

The portfolio has a thematic investment approach, investing in powerful themes that have been identified as critical to driving innovation and shaping the global economy. Given the more focused nature of the investment approach, returns may differ substantially from global equities.

Market and Portfolio Update

President Trump continues to redefine US relations with the world, putting pressure on Europe to increase defence spending and pressing forward with tariffs on key trading partners. However, stock market leadership so far this year has come from Europe and Asia and not the US, where the post-election 'Trump bump' has been fading. Inflation refuses to be cowed and hovering at 3% year-on-year is causing angst for central bankers who'd prefer to be cutting interest rates to support growth. The path to peace in Ukraine is not going to be a straight one, as Zelensky's public dressing down in the White House at the end of the month proves. Europe is feeling a little isolated, although it's been good news for the region's defence companies, whose share prices have reacted warmly on the need to rearm the bloc. Nevertheless, peace could be a boost to Europe's economy and stock markets, not least because it could lead to lower energy prices, which would be good news for all.

We made no changes to the Global Megatrends portfolio in February.
